"Mi senor"—
"Suesce! Let a hundred horses leave the palace instantly and dy to the thickest part of the rot! Order my guard, both horse and foot, to prepare for hattle! Go, Condo, and repair your faults by your promptitude in seeing my orders executed. Go?"

Badajor and the shirtly withdrew. The Duke of Arcos began pacing the room again, but his democanor had lost much of its calm and noble dignity. 'A revolution! Bah! it is absurd!" said he. 'These secondress have hed. Bendes, I have force senough to make all these Meapor than rascals suo for merey. But, by our Lady they must be mad! Oh! his Catholic Majesty would certainly laugh, if he could see all this. So, so, sweet people, you have longed for blood, and blood you shall have! "At this moment the Conde returned. Their followed a scene in which grief took the place of anger. The duke threw himself at his daughter's feet, took her hands in his, and vamily endeavored to revive her. A number of wild looking men, with their have in disorder and their faces black with powder, rushed at this moment into the chamber. They came to amounce that the revolt was victorious. The troops, obliged to yield before the people, had fallen back in confusion on the Viceria.
